DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Brooks Farm is one of the unfortunate houses which is not long for this world. When visited in March, 1975 the roof had collapsed into the structure, caused by the disintegration and collapse of the chimneys. Located at the end of Harrisville Road south of Woolford, the house is not in a prime location for restoration.

It is a four bay long, two story building with a two bay long, one and one-half story kitchen wing. It is a large building according to the other buildings of the period in the county and is comparable to St. Giles Field, not only because of its size and condition, but also because of its detail.

The house retains its original beaded weatherboard, 9/6 sash windows and louvered shutters. A porch over the entrance appears to post-date the house by about 30 - 40 years. There is also a leanto porch on the south side of the kitchen wing. Both chimneys, which were located within the gables of the house have collapsed upon themselves. There is a large kitchen chimney on the east gable of the wing.

The interior of the house is not unlike the plan of many smaller houses of the period, having two rooms in the main body of the house with a corridor leading past an unheated room to the kitchen. There is an enclosed stair in the south outter corner of both rooms and the kitchen. Before the destruction of the woodwork, the two fireplace walls were identical, having a tall Federal mantel below a plaster panel. On the north side is a cabinet (doors missing) with double doors on the outside and a narrow, single door cabinet adjacent the chimney (similar to Rubye Brooks House and Patrick's Discovery). On the south side of the chimneys were closet doors and the stairs with four steps, with balustrade to the door. The steps ends have a unique quarter-moon pierced design. Above the closet doors are vertical beaded boards. The closet door in the east room leads to the kitchen. Between the two rooms is a vertical beaded board wall. The chair rail is one of the most interesting features of the house, beside the broken mantels. It is composed of four pieces: 1. the beaded base; 2. a band of gauge and drillwork, composed of two reeds seperating three drill holes, the top one being larger than the bottom two, and having a ovolo molding at the base; 3. the usual bead and cove molding; and 4. a torus cap.

On the second story there are actually three seperate parts to the house. The west stair leads to a hall and three small rooms; the middle stair to a hall and two small rooms; the kitchen stair leads to two other rooms. There is no access between the two parts in the main portion, similar to St. Giles Field before the door was broken through
